The best way to describe Fast & Low is a super charged, tactical shooter, in a simple and accessible format. You're a Medic. You've been sent to a remote local for an extraction. The chopper will be back for you in an hour and your only mission is to get inside the target building and blow the wire room from inside before your extraction. At first this might sound complicated or confusing, but once you get the flow of the game it should be a breeze. Key Features Three character classes Each having their own unique weapons and more importantly, their own playstyle Three co-op races Feisty AI that will put more of the fun back into frantic tactical gaming We played it at our office and I'll tell you that I'd call this a good replacement for the PC. It is quite impressive to be able to bring over fine controls from the consoles and smoothly translate this into the PC. It's true that some small bugs are still there (like changing your view in the menus) and some features are missing (no torchlight or GPS, the game can be a bit weird at times) but overall, it's a great game to play with the controller if you have a PC. In fact it's the only reason why I have the PC and not the console. Update: Full review at GOG.com "As for the body of the game it's a bit clunky, but it's made up for with a strong story. "Fast & Low" manages to fit together the virtual simulation of three different police officer game modes at once: police officer, traffic cop, SWAT and race car cop. It gives off an air of authenticity and fits a modern twist on the games that we remember from the '80s." "From 'N Sync, to Taylor Swift, 90's-themed restaurants and bags over your head to a broken car wash for a disguise, "Fast & Low" will keep you on your toes with its character-driven dialogue and dark tone." "The developers goal is "build a simple, accessible and fun parkour-style runner. A touch of Monaco, a dash of Climb, with a refreshing fountain of accessibility as the goal." And for a free piece of software, it's done pretty well
