The molecular biology of a proton-coupled D-glucose transporter (SGLT1) and H(+)-secretory proteins (H(+)-V-HCO(3)(-) cotransporter (PHT)) has been thoroughly characterized. In this study, we have determined the effect of various morphine-derived drugs on SGLT1 and PHT mRNA and protein expression in rat ileum. The aim of this study was to investigate the effect of morphine-derived drugs on the occurrence of ileal hypermotility via the inhibition of ileal PHT protein. Rats were randomly assigned to control group, morphine group, and morphine + naloxone group. After intraperitoneal injection of morphine sulfate, naloxone, and distilled water, rats' ileal muscle tissue samples were examined by immunohistochemistry. The expressions of SGLT1, PHT protein, and their mRNA in the ileum were detected by real-time PCR and Western blot Peritoneal mast cells of rats were investigated by means of electron microscopy, quantitative morphometry, and autoradiography. Although the mast cells had a similar ultrastructural appearance, individual cells exhibited a large variation in their morphological features. This population heterogeneity may be related to their differentiation and/or maturation stages. The juxtannuclear granule was the most frequent specific feature in peritoneal mast cells, and was associated with electron-lucent areas within the granule. Biphasic ultrastructure of the Golgi complex was detected, with a distinct Golgi complex in the perikaryon and a larger 'Golgi complex' in the extension. Quantitative morphometry of the various elements of the cell organelles showed that the cytoplasmic density was highest in the extension, in the perikaryon of the mast cell, and in the surrounding connective tissue.HOME >> CHRONIC BACK PAIN >> CHRONIC BACK PAIN >>
