About The Game: Soccer Adventures is a unique 3D soccer matchmaking game. It is a unique mix of matchmaking and simple puzzle game. Each match consists of 2 teams on 3D soccer pitch with a goal each. The match starts with a 5 second warm up. The teams take turns picking their player, having a look at the players, pressing them in and out, checking out their reaction to the pitch and so on. After that, the players kick off and soon a familiar 3D soccer match is played on an extremely detailed soccer pitch. During the match and between the match, the player can interact with the pitch and other players. It is always up to the player to decide how he/she wants to play the game. The game doesn't have the often used "goal button" approach. Instead you have a method of scoring the goal when all players of the team score consecutively. There are several modes to play. Quick Play mode lets you play just 1 match for practice, training or just a quick match. You can also play a Season mode, where you can complete all the matches during a season. The season can consist of say 50 matches, or with just 15 matches if that is more doable for the player. The Season mode allows the player to compete in league tables. During the game the player is able to use player equipment and the player equipment is composed of hit areas and bodyguards. Each of the players on the pitch has areas on the pitch he/she can hit. The player equipment can be adjusted to fit players of different heights. It is possible to change the position of the equipments and to assign a bodyguard for each player. When the player selects a player, it is possible to adjust the player equipment and to assign a bodyguard for him/her. FIFA 2010 is the most popular association football simulation game. Since its release in September 2009 by Electronic Arts (EA), players have been enthusiastic to try the FIFA franchise games. If you are one of those people who likes to be in charge of the match, you will most probably enjoy Soccer Adventures. The game is suitable for players who like to play soccer matches, and it also allows players to have a look at how the matches are played. With Soccer Adventures you can get what it feels like to be the coach of one of the teams and to take over from the assistant manager (who also is a player

What's new:

Fantastic Troop (TFT) is a 1987 adventure game computer game for the Nintendo Entertainment System developed by N.C. Soft and published by Brøderbund. The game casts the player as a commander assigned to command a battalion of soldiers deployed in advance of an invasion of a city by the enemy forces. Players are required to explore the city, find weapons, arm the soldiers and fight their way into the enemy's stronghold, while doing their best to avoid the same fate as the soldiers they command. According to the game, it is impossible for the players to win, but they can succeed and survive. The game was released on October 18, 1987 in Japan, and December 1987 in North America. It would later be rereleased by Atari Corporation in the US in November 1989 under their strategy label. The game was later ported to the MSX computer in Japan on November 30, 1989. Although it is a massively multiplayer gameplay mechanic, Fantastic Troop was originally conceived as a single-player game. The involvement of the public for the first year of the game was an unprecedented feat as well, raising a considerable amount of money for the hospitals, schools and cities that had suffered in the course of World War II. It was also released in Korea as Famic Truck, a port of the Famicom version which was a hit in that country. Gameplay The game starts with players being dropped into an enemy aircraft carrier a few kilometers off the coast of an unnamed Asian country. The player's mission is to take his or her soldiers to the city of Destruction. They must be retrieved by parachute once arriving in the city. Upon arriving in the main area of the city, they find their soldiers scattered across the landscape in the form of green footprints. Before the invasion, a twisted pair of humanoid rats (one of which is mutated in later versions) is seen growing steadily stronger until the player can witness the destruction of its final form: the arachnoid creature, Meepo, and the destruction of the invasion launch trucks. The arachnoid creature is supposed to represent the evil, devouring nature of World War II, which claims everyone in the country at the same time. The player must reduce the number of soldiers lost during the invasion by all means possible. At some points, the player will be forced to fight against the enemy's flying beasts, giant mechanical spiders or even illusions in order to survive. The player may fail to complete many missions successfully in the same day

DreadBall is a high-spirited sport where two teams of six players compete to score on the field of action by rolling around large inflatable balls. Controlling a ball is as easy as hitting a ball with your hand, but the true challenge in DreadBall is getting enough contact with your opponent in order to score. The set-up is simple: a team is created by enlisting two captains, a striker, two defenders and a throwing winger. Each player then sets his preferences for different roles, selecting their team face and apparel, and a suitable ball is selected. When the game begins, DreadBall partners with real-time physics to get the players into position and force them to react as the ball makes contact. A hockey puck rises, skates forward, passes through the air and hits your hand. What else can you do? Your whole body responds, the momentum carries you from your hips through your shoulders, arms, and fingers, and you send a ball rolling through the air towards your opponent. You may do that by any means necessary. It doesn't matter whether you're running full-bore down the field or sprinting into position, if you manage to make a contact during the time interval between when the ball rolls and when it strikes the ground, the ball has bounced and you score. Play is fast and fluid, and each play ends in a flurry of fun activity. In the end, you and your opponent set the tone for each match, with full-contact and hard hits being rewarded, but there are other ways to win. Running a draw stroke can build momentum and roll the ball over your opponent or get the puck to his feet. Snapping the arm and shoulder at the player in midair can propel yourself to the top of the pile. Sometimes you can even score by exploiting a friendly defender. The way you play is never set in stone. As your team competes for the ball, different strategies emerge. You may need to outmuscle your opponent to gain the ball, or simply outjump him and propel yourself into the scoring zone. You may need to be able to split the defense like butter. Or, if the defense is too big for you to cut through, you may need to choose a different tactic. Naturally, you want to maximize your chances of scoring and playing aggressive defense will help ensure that you're never caught flat-footed. The point of DreadBall is to score and to score a lot of points. Do that by connecting with the ball and do

If you're in the UK I'd avoid going to 'whois' as it can be banned and will cause lots of problems I'm working on a solution to that, anyway, its for own purposes and more something like a page to put links to other websites that vave their content hosted on non-standard domain names I like that idea as I don't know how to get anything said or done about it If anybody could tell me how to actually do a virtual server on Debian i would be very gratefull Thanks Who isn't? "oh no! call us on a landline! eeewwww!!!" this is what I did. I think it works okay. I made a VPS on IPAnet - it's free - and configured the VirtualHosts to point to the folder with the svn repository. I've seen ifconfig in the house before. I thought I'd run into coppers by posting that or something. They'd just pull my arms out of their sockets laughing. IPAnet would appear to be a server which is perfectly fine to use and it has a couple of nice features. Problem is that you can run it on any Linux OS like a normal server. (No you can't run a windows server on it although I think the port is filtered) IPAnet offers support 24/7 and has great advice when it comes to setting up a server. Last point, you mention wanting to host your own site (wouldn't you if you were going to personally run a site? ) try out your hosting at IPAnet for a while

System Requirements For The Final Stand: Breakout:

Please note that this is an unofficial patch for the PS3 and can be used by everyone. The Hacking Labs are launching a new site today called 'PS3 Minis Wiki'. We've put together a list of helpful information for anyone who wants to know how to customize their PS3 to their liking and even how to modify their PS3 to run homebrew games. This is a wiki of sorts, so if you have any more information about the PS3 or what it can do, please add it here! Right now we are just trying to make the site
