Hi I am new to the Blender API and I just don't get what the difference between `bpy.ops.mesh.compute_normals(...)` `bpy.ops.mesh.compute.gen(Orbit, true, false, false)` is. By the documentation both are in the mesh ops, but what do the parameters mean and why it's better to use `compute.gen` instead? A: `Compute.gen()` returns a collection of "wire" lines (with a length set to 1) on a surface, for which the vector's length is specified by the height of the surface. These lines are a set of vectors at each point on the surface. Take a look at the source code for more information: Living room windows can certainly be one of the most important spaces in your home, as they provide visual stimulation, vital fresh air, and light. For people who suffer from serious illnesses, living room windows are particularly important, as even a small amount of sunlight can be significantly beneficial for the quality of one's life. In addition to that, some people simply enjoy spending time in their living room windows, soaking up the sunlight. Fortunately, there are ways to adapt a number of living room window designs to make them more accommodating for those who suffer from health issues. For example, you can easily convert a regular or stylish living room window into a clear window, which will provide your home a bright, sunny atmosphere. Moreover, you can also install high windows in your house, so that you are able to enjoy the natural light all year round, regardless of the time of day. Read on to learn more about how to convert your living room windows into versatile and functional designs! Window Styles A
