The most recent report from the Federal Reserve Board of Governors, issued in October 2018, shows that the gap between the cost of consumer credit—including loans, lines of credit, credit cards, and mortgages—and income has grown for five of the last six years. After two years of small declines, it rose in 2018 to a level at which households have less ability to borrow to meet their needs. The share of household income that goes toward paying interest on consumer credit debt rose to 7.6% in October 2018, up from 6.3% in 2007. Meanwhile, the share of income going toward paying interest on revolving debt (the kind that must be repaid with each transaction) fell to 6.9%, down from 8.3% in 2007. The average monthly payment for revolving debt stood at $389.
